Excerpt: . chapter viii lights and shadows of the ufb lmost every noted actor with whom I have tions for stage work has placed enthusiasm at the head of the list. The man or woman who does not love the work is pretty sure to make nothing of it and to retire in disappointment sooner or later, or else to continue in a half-hearted sort of way that leads to nothing. Of course it is a hard life. Miss Clara Morris, who has seen some thirty years of it, said once: What attraction has the stage for its followers that they are so devoted to it? Yes, we are devoted to it, we respect its antiquity; we admire the position it has gained in the world of art; we are grateful to it for our daily bread. One of its attractions is that it may prove a short cut to popularity. Then people of other callings transact their business amid more talked concerning the essential qualificaor less dull surroundings and return to their homes for that which the actor finds at the theatre alone, namely: light, warmth, music, sociability. For my part, I do not believe in a mute, inglorious Milton. I think that all power demands expression, and the employment of power is a delight. The actor who succeeds feels he pleases his public and therein finds his own pleasure. When triumph comes to him, it is in so delightful a guise he cannot...
