Reviews

This type of publication is every thing and helped me seeking ahead and much more. It usually fails to charge too much. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Dublin Review, Vol. 21: July October, 1873 Our own personal sympathy with Mr. Mill on one or two points was so great, that we believe there was more danger of our transgressing those limits than of our committing the opposite fault. One such point of sympathy was what always impressed us as his unselfishness; his zeal for what he believed the truth; and his preference of public over personal objects. Nor again must we fail to commemorate his earnest opposition to nationalism in every shape. He never spoke otherwise than with grave reprobation of that pseudo-patriotism, which implies that men can laudably direct a course of conduct to the mere pursuit of their country's temporal aggrandisement. His notions as to wherein man's highest good consists must be accounted by every Catholic deplorably erroneous; but he was thoroughly penetrated with the great truth, that the genuine patriot aims at his countrymen's highest good, and not at their worldly exaltation or glory. A very able commentator on his character, in the Pall Mall Gazette of May 10th, considers that Mr. Mill was by temperament essentially religious; and that his absence of definite religious convictions produced a sharp contrast in his mind between theory and feeling. We quite agree with what is indicated by this remark. Mr. Mill possessed apparently passionate feelings of love, which were ever yearning for an adequate object; and he was alas! ignorant of Him, Who implants such feelings in order that they may be concentrated on Himself. It is in this way we should account for that generous self-sacrificing philanthropy, which we commemorated in our above-named article;...
