Excerpt: . . . the amount of aluminum used, however, being small. The amount of aluminum used to give the best results varies with the grade of steel, amount of occluded gases, temperature of the molten metal, etc. Aluminum is usually added in proportions of from oneeighth to three-quarters of a pound to the ton of steel; the aluminum being added either in the ladle, or in the case of steel castings, with more economy of the aluminum as the metal is being poured into the ingot moulds or groups of moulds. Until the proper percentage of aluminum to add to any particular grade of steel has been determined, it is advisable to start with small lots, for instance, with two or three ounces to the ton, working up to the proportion that seems to give the best results. The special advantages to be gained by the use of...
